HELVETICA
Est. 1957

Helvetica, was created by Max Miedlinger (pictured left) with the input of Eduard Hoffmann as the Haas'sche Schriftgiesserei (Haas type foundry) in Munchenstein, Switzerland. Miedlinger was tasked with creating a neutral typeface that did not give off any impression nor meaning. It was originally named Die Neue Haas Grotesk, and was later renamed to what we now know as Helvetica, for better international marketing. The name Helvetica comes from the Latin translation for Swiss.

Helvetica is among the most commonly used sans-serif typefaces.
